Scene: Outside the Islesman's dwelling. A peat fire on the floor within can be seen through the open door. Without are stools, stones, and a peat-stack to one side, with sea and sky beyond. A late afternoon in summer. Seven years later. (The Cailleach is seated by the door. The two Fishers are heard approaching and singing without. They enter, carrying oars and rowlocks for the boat, which they are to bring round the headland at <sup>the</sup> turn of tide to carry the Cailleach to their own island.)
